Changes have taken place in the north that have affected the real estate and hotel business in Florida—and these are big changes. These changes have lessened the force of the temptation to come to Florida for a stay in the tourist season, and indicate that the tourist business in Florida must be conducted on new lines hereafter. When transportation facilities were bad, the tourist was a winter resident; he stayed in one place as long as he was in the state, now he stops at a hotel or in an apartment for a few days and then goes to the next town to see what it is like. Possessing his own car, or using a bus, he can do this easily, as he could not do it before the time of good roads.

Some of us remember the time up north when anthracite coal in a base burner in the parlor and wood in a cook stove in the kitchen were the heating arrangements. Use of soft coal in the parlor stove was out of the question—hard coal had to be used, and hard coal cost a lot of money. Housewives, wives and children, quarried about who would bring in the fuel and remove the ashes and start the fires in the mornings. Theaters, churches, school houses, and other places of public assembly were heated by the same unsatisfactory method. It wasn't pleasant to stay at home but you couldn't go anywhere because the wagons couldn't get through on the bad roads, and if you did get anywhere it was just as uncomfortable as was back at home.

There was a time when a man could close his house and take his family to California at an expense not much greater than that of the coal he would burn. If he stayed at home, and many people did at that, and California thrived and was built up by farmers from the mid-west. While this was a process that connected the mid-west and California, there was a similar contact between the north Atlantic seaboard and Florida. Unfortunately, Florida sought society people and people of large wealth while California was getting people who were used to working for a living and who expected to keep on working. California got an agricultural and industrial development from its class of tourists and investors. It was rather late

Both teams showed excellent team work. Winning the first game was great encouragement to the Pahoekes players and we think the New Year's resolution, or at least it was a resolution, to continue along the victorious line. Each player deserves praise for their good playing but Oretta (retha) Thompson proved her ability to become a first class forward. Oretta has been playing running center.

SOUTH BAY

The work of harvesting sugar cane in the South Bay zone of the Southern Sugar Company is proceeding satisfactorily under the supervision of the zone superintendent, S. J. Fisher, who reports they are cutting 30 loads daily which will shortly be increased to 50. The cane is going to the Cleveiston mill which is now in operation, a train load being hauled each day. R. G. Fisher is now serving as weigh boss for this zone.

Two gentlemen from this vicinity were overheard discussing a line of bees belonging to one of them. The other man remarked to the bee man, "It is about time you robbed them bees." OKEELANTA

Jan. 6, 1931.

New Year's day couldn't lay claim to be an ideal introduction to the Everglades better realizations of the climate of this part of the state, anyhow, for this year.

The Littles, father and son, from the Miami canal settlement and Harry Coombs with Mr. Stokker and son from Miami, partook of their New Year's dinner at the home of V. W. Roth, who enjoyed the hospitality of his neighbors, the Anjima family.

The forepart of the past week saw the departure of Harry Simpson and wife and boys for their home in Canton, Ohio. They were so well pleased with their visit to the Glades that they expect to spend the next annual vacation of the husband and father with their children, the Coopers (Charmers) here again.

SOME REFLECTIONS

ON MIRROR PROBLEM
When Mrs. Mary Shaw, wife of Louisville, Ky., died she left a will and because she had some $100 at Palmale in Glades county the will had to be filed at Moore Haven. One of her possessions was a mirror, evidently valued as a heirloom, and the mirror was "willed" to her two daughters. The will recites that as both daughters might want the mirror, "in that case the mirror shall be cut in two and each daughter take half."

The Glades County Democrat which reports the filing of the will and notes the reference to the mirror, wonders what would happen if one daughter wanted the mirror cut the long way and the other daughter wanted it cut through the middle.
